Map Your Business - Worksheet

The brain pattern is general. To wire it to your business, you need to know your business in a structured way - the workflows that recur, the inputs and outputs of each, the people and tools involved. Fill this in. The output is a map you can hand to an agent.

1. Business shape

In one sentence, what does your business sell?

Who is your customer (one sentence)?

What is the unit you sell (a project, a subscription, an hour, a product)?

How many of those units do you sell per month?

2. Recurring workflows

List every workflow you do at least weekly. One row per workflow. Frequency matters - rare workflows are bad first targets.

Workflow	Frequency	Trigger	Output	Who does it today

3. Tools you pay for

List each tool, what it does, monthly cost. Used for the savings story when wiring a brain into the workflows.

Tool	What it does	Cost / month

4. People involved

Every person who touches a workflow. Title, role, scope of responsibility.

Person	Title / role	Workflows they touch

5. The wedge

From your workflow list, pick ONE to wire first. The right wedge is recurring (at least weekly), has a clear input and output, and you trust yourself to review the output before it ships. Write the wedge name and one sentence on why it is the right first wedge.

6. Success criteria

How will you know the wedge is working? Pick metrics you can measure in week one.

When this worksheet is full, you have everything an agent needs to start running your wedge. Module 5's walkthrough builds the agent. The matrix in agent-role-decision-matrix.pdf tells you which agent to reach for.
